

OUTREACH PLAN

Outreach Plan for the Red Wolf (Canis rufus)

Issue:

Announcement of a proposed rule to remove the nonessential experimental population (NEP) status for an introduced population of red wolves in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park (Park) in North Carolina and Tennessee and to revise the special rule for the remaining NEP of red wolves in northeastern North Carolina (NENC). The reintroduction attempt in the Park has been terminated, and changes are needed in the special rule for the NENC population due to possible misinterpretations, changing conditions, and new information.

Basic Facts About the Issue:

- ▶ The proposed removal of the NEP status for the Park population of red wolves will not reduce or change the protection provided to any red wolves that may still be present in the area.
- ▶ The current status of the red wolf population in NENC with regard to population size and ecology and the threat from hybridization with the closely related coyote necessitate minor changes in the regulations to conserve and recover the species.
- ▶ These changes address the removal of red wolves from private land and the possible taking of red wolves of unknown origin in order to control hybridization with the coyote. Red wolves that present problems will be removed from private land, if possible, but red wolves that do not cause problems, as defined in the proposal, may or may not be removed, depending on the circumstances regarding each individual case.

Communication Goals:

- ▶ Host public open houses in NENC.
- ▶ Invite Federal and State legislators, local and State government officials, and landowners to the open houses.
- ▶ Notify the public of the open houses.
- ▶ Advise the public of the proposed rule.
- ▶ Ensure accurate news stories.
- ▶ Assure the public that we will work with them to resolve conflicts while conserving and recovering the red wolf.

Message:

The proposal, if made final, will officially remove the NEP status of a population where a reintroduction attempt has been terminated and will provide the needed protection for the remaining population by implementing management while striving to address private landowner concerns.

Expressions of Interest or Concern:

Hyde and Washington Counties passed resolutions opposing the red wolf project in NENC. The American Farm Bureau Federation opposes the red wolf recovery program as a matter of national policy, but has cooperated with and complimented us regarding management of the program. A group of private landowners in Hyde County, called "Citizens Rights Over Wolves Now" (CROWN), opposes the recovery program in NENC. It is comprised largely of local private landowners, a reporter, and county politicians. In contrast, 18 private landowners, whose land encompasses almost 200,000 acres, cooperate in the recovery program by allowing wolves to inhabit their land. Hyde and Washington Counties, along with two private landowners, filed a lawsuit on March 5, 1997, challenging Federal versus State rights to regulate the taking of red wolves on private land. The U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of North Carolina granted a Federal Government Motion for Summary Judgment on December 21, 1999, in this suit. The plaintiffs have appealed this decision.

Three independent surveys confirm widespread support for red wolf restoration. The first, an attitude survey conducted in 1995 by North Carolina State University in the NENC reintroduction area, revealed that the majority of local residents support the reintroduction. A 1996 economic survey, also conducted within the NENC reintroduction area, by East Carolina University, again showed strong support for the project; over three-fourths of the respondents indicated a willingness to contribute financial support. Cornell University conducted another economic survey in 1996 in an eight-State area within and adjacent to the two reintroduction areas. This survey also showed strong support and indicated that potential economic benefits could exceed expenditures by a factor of nine to one.

Potentially Controversial Issues:

CROWN may oppose the proposed revision to limit the removal of red wolves from private land only if they are causing problems.
